Encounter with the Harrington Collection: Building a New Generation of Access

The John P. Harrington Papers, one of the largest collections in the National Anthropological Archives, has been extensively used by researchers as diverse as linguists, ethnobotanists, environmental scientists, cultural anthropologists, and Native scholars from Oklahoma to Oregon. The NAA has launched a new effort to make this material more accessible, moving from microfilm and audio tape to online access. Members of the team will speak about some of the challenges, achievements, and rewards of work with this complex and challenging collection.

A collaborative initiative of National Museum of Natural History, National Museum of the American Indian and the Smithsonian Center for Folklife and Cultural Heritage.
